

POV1: Document 6

As a member of the French government and the law's namesake, Toubon is very likely to be biased towards favoring the Toubon law, making this document untrustworthy.

POV2: Document 7

Considering that d'Ormesson is a member of the Académie française and is therefore more likely to have a more thorough understanding of linguistics, this document is likely reliable.

POV3: Document 8

As a young person, the teacher interviewed as part of the study would have been inclined to support the more secular policies of the society that he/she grew up in; this document is unreliable in giving the perspective of educators as a whole.

POV4: Document 9

Because this document was written by a French farmer and food activist in order to decry the modern food industry, it cannot be trusted since it gives a biased view of how French cooking is affected, meant to give more credence to Bové's other ideas.
